WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Gusty southwest winds with dry conditions in the eastern areas today for High Risk conditions

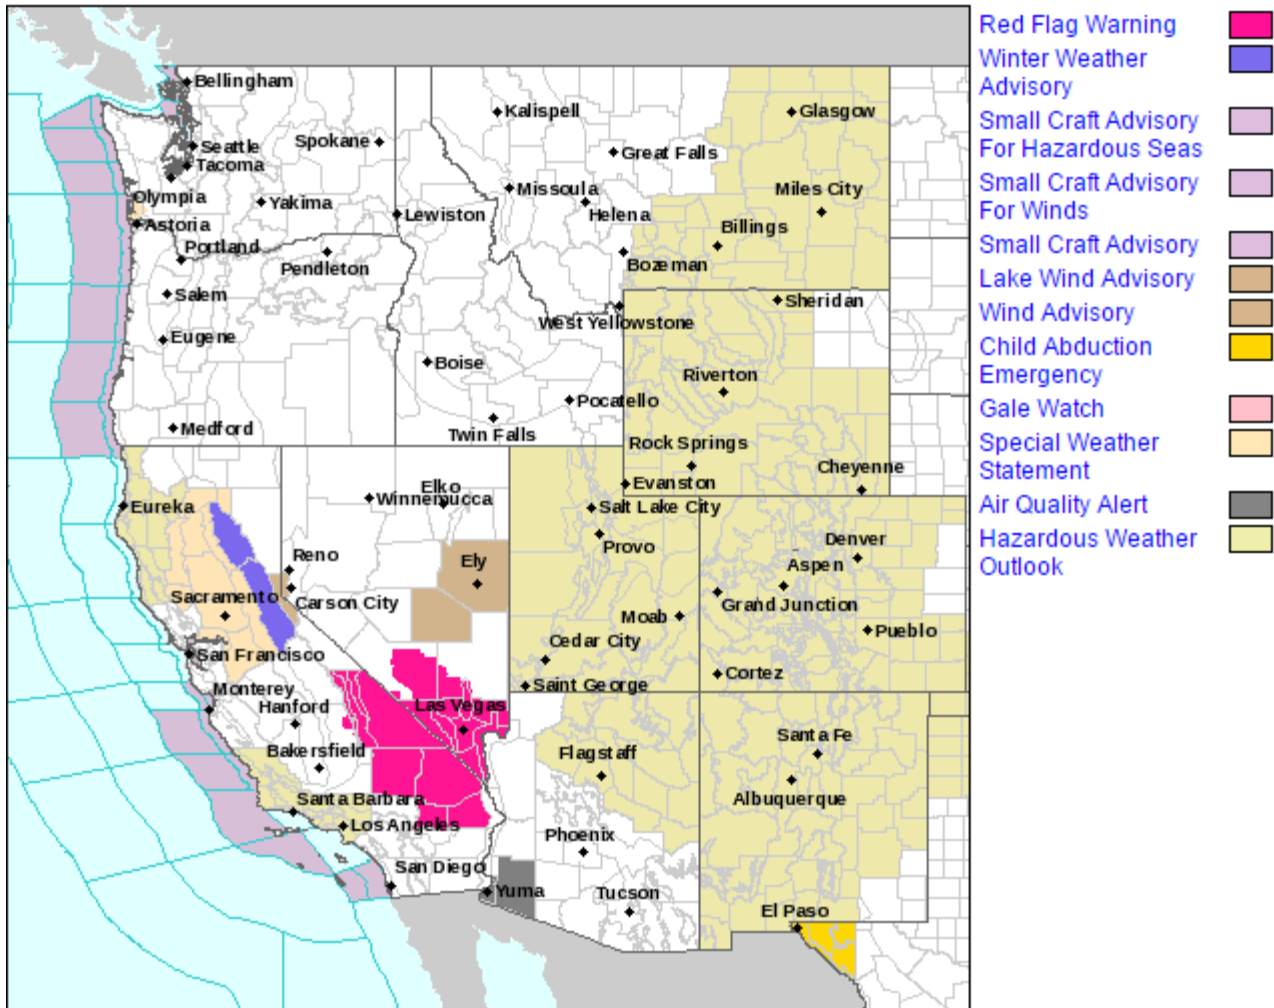

A relatively cool low pressure trough is just offshore this morning and will be the dominant weather feature affecting Northern California into early next week. Starting today, temperatures will be below normal well into next week. Temperatures will be about 10-15 degrees below normal in most areas through Tuesday. Moderate to strong, gusty southwest winds will develop near and east of the Cascade/Sierra Crest this afternoon. Although relative humidity may not be all that low in some areas (15-30% expected today), gusts will probably reach 30-40 mph, which tips conditions over into the High Risk category. Much lighter winds are expected Saturday. Precipitation is expected to develop along the northwest coast tonight, mainly north of Cape Mendocino where it will linger Saturday while the rest of Northern California remains dry through Saturday. As the trough moves ashore Sunday, more widespread rain and some mountain snow are expected with many areas of the region likely to see wetting rain/snow, including the Bay Area and locations east of the crest. Far Northwest California may have storm totals of 1 to 1.5 inches of rainfall from this system. Lower elevations in the south and eastern areas may only see a trace to 0.10 inch of rainfall. Snow levels could drop as low as 5,000 feet in the north and 6,000 feet in the south late Sunday into early Monday. By Monday afternoon the trough appears likely to have moved east into the Great Basin, and precipitation should end by then. A chance of some light rain showers will likely continue Tuesday, mainly in our northern areas. Higher pressure will return Wednesday and Thursday to produce drier and slowly warming weather with the warmest inland areas probably returning to the lower 80's.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A deep trough will move through the state over the weekend, bringing windy and cooler weather. The trough will slowly approach the area today, which will result in an increase in onshore pressure gradients this afternoon. It will turn breezy along the central coast and the desert interface areas where winds of 15-25 mph will be possible this afternoon. Temperatures will remain warm today with highs in the upper 80's to lower 90's in the valleys, but much cooler weather will arrive for the weekend. By Sunday and Monday, highs will only be in the upper 50's and 60's in the mountains to the 70's in the valleys. Northwest winds of 20-30 mph will be possible on the central coast during the afternoon hours this weekend. Additionally, west winds of 20-30 mph with gusts over 40 mph will occur each afternoon in the Kern County Mountains, Antelope Valley, Banning Pass and the Cleveland National Forest Sunday and Monday during the afternoon. Gusty north winds will be likely Sunday night into Monday in Santa Barbara County and the I-5 Corridor. All winds should decrease Monday evening. Warmer weather is expected by the middle of next week.
